Group update

by Yunal Berk

Hello fellow human,

We are delighted to welcome you to the 11th FIGU England newsletter. But before we start, let us ask you the following: Have you ever asked yourself why you're born, why we live, why we die? Have you ever thought of the wider Galaxy and Universe as a whole? Did you ever wonder why certain so-called wonders happen in life? Surely, you asked yourself one way or another about things you can't explain. Surely you tried to find an answer through research, logic, and restless drive to explain the unexplainable.

This is one of the reasons why you're reading this page, because you want to know more and find the right answers to your questions.

If truly this is your aim, we kindly invite you to sit back, relax and enjoy. Fasten your seat belt as you're about to experience an unorthodox, unconventional experience yet very familiar to you.

Each of us, dear fellow human, like you, researched, and found the FIGU England Study Group. Driven by desire of knowledge, we gave ourselves a chance without any prejudice, expectations, and plenty of time to study about the so-called Billy Meier case and the UFO's. To our surprise it turned out it was so much more than just UFO's.

The way of life, the Spiritual Teaching, the Creational laws or with other words the Creation energy teaching is one of our main interests which is truly breathtaking and unlocks the door to many unexplainable things in life.

Dear Friend, FIGU England is a small community of likeminded people who come together once a month to discuss Overpopulation, the Creation Energy teaching, Billy's books, and all kinds of things when it comes to consciousness, psychological, technological, philosophical, and ideological nature.

We come together virtually via Skype and also do occasional catchups together in person.

In May 2023 the group had its 1st Annual meeting Weekend.

We enjoyed the amazing nature at Centre Parcs Elveden Forest in Suffolk and used the time for discussion, reflection, fellowship, and healthy outdoor activity.

Our group has an ongoing internet presence. We endeavour to promote key aspects of the FIGU mission through the primary FIGU-England webpage and through social media such as Instagram and Youtube.

Last year we heavily focused on:

1. Overpopulation awareness
2. Spreading the word about the correct peace symbol
3. A countdown timer / timetable for the peace meditation
4. Info Stands in cities such as Cambridge

FIGU England welcomed a new member in 2023. We noticed more people ask about Billy Meier and FIGU England every day.

Our aim in 2024 is to hold our 2nd FIGU England Annual meeting and continue posting Billy Meier Articles, translations, videos, photos, news and so much more.

If you're interested like us in a healthy, neutral-positive conversations regarding the Billy Meier case, overpopulation, the Creation Energy teaching, Billy's books, and all kinds of things when it comes to consciousness, psychological, technological, philosophical, and ideological nature, feel free to get in touch.

We look forward to meeting you at some point in the future.

Salome, Yunal.

Be careful what you wish for

by Jonathan Steven

Let's be honest, I'm sure sooner or later anybody who has spent any significant period of time studying the Billy Meier material reaches the point where the thought goes through their head as to how much they would like to meet a Plejaren. I will freely and unashamedly admit that I am certainly one of them. Over the years, through Billy, we have not only been convincingly introduced to the concept of the existence of extra-terrestrial life, but we have also been given an extraordinarily personal insight into the lives and culture of an advanced alien race. This, we have been kindly given through the Contact Reports, because unfortunately more personal widespread contact with the Plejaren has been severely restricted with the Plejaren insisting they will only speak directly with Billy (with only the extremely rare notable exception e.g. Wendelle Stevens). This is a shame but is understandable for two key reasons. Firstly, the Plejaren can be significantly impacted by our negative thoughts. As a more evolved culture, their psyches are much more balanced than ours are and being notably more telepathically sensitive than us, the impact of our whirling, unbalanced thought processes can be deeply disturbing and dangerous for them if they do not fastidiously apply careful protective measures. The second key reason is unfortunately extremely damning upon us as a culture. In previous incarnations of Billy's "Nokodemion" spirit form, the Plejaren revealed themselves to a much greater extent than they have in recent years. However, this continuously led to a break-down in their efforts to support the development of the Creation-Energy teaching here on Earth. This was because although Billy (and his previous personalities) had the most advanced spirit form and as such were the most qualified individuals to explain and promulgate the Creation-Energy teaching here on Earth, a person would always arise who believed they could do it better. The subsequent discord that resulted as they would try to usurp Billy and attempt to lead the relationship with the Plejaren repeatedly thwarted efforts to develop a basis for the teaching. To prevent this from happening again this time around during Billy's lifetime the Plejaren have severely limited their personal interactions.

Upon reflection it is clear to see why the Plejaren applied this stipulation to the current time because we have still not yet evolved out of this behaviour. Any search of the internet will uncover a huge number of "influencers", "analysts" and "commentators" who all believe they know best. When inviting tradesmen to my home to obtain quotes for projects, I've become used to the regular, scornful comment of "Who did this?" when reviewing the basis upon what they'll have replace or build off because of course their work is infinitely superior to everybody else's. In one memorable and rather humorous case the builder came unstuck when I kindly mentioned that he had in fact done the previous work 10 years earlier. Five minutes later the project miraculously became much more straightforward because there weren't too many issues with what had been done previously.....

As a culture it is clear to see that we find it very easy to identify the shortcomings of others, because we think we're superior and can do better. This is often from the position of not having the weight, or appreciating the weight, of the responsibility that comes from being in the position itself, to which the comments and judgements are being made. In many a case, the person who thinks that they can do better, often if finally achieving the role that has been coveted, demonstrate they can't when faced with the actual challenges that the previous incumbent was attempting to overcome.

In our imagination, when we dream of meeting a Plejaren we don't really consider those fundamental reasons why the Plejaren aren't already socialising more with us. I don't believe we fully appreciate how different our cultures presently are. The Plejaren have put the striving to evolve, as defined by the Creational-Energy teaching, at the centre of their society. This involves reflecting, analysing, discerning, learning, and putting into place changes that improve their society psychologically, emotionally, technologically, and socially. Our society is based upon religion and probably more importantly now in the Western based societies the need to derive wealth, power, and status above that of our neighbours. This need appears to be growing continually stronger and is manifesting itself not just on an individual, but also on a corporate and at a state level.

Anyone familiar with the “House” television series knows that one of the famous lines used by the character Doctor Gregory House (played by actor Hugh Laurie) is that “Everybody lies.” To an extent, I believe this is true not just in the fictional series but in reality, on Earth. As a society we have become very adept at putting on a presentable, external veneer through which we engage in our adult interactions, hiding our real, less presentable characters behind these veneers. In doing so we live out our lives hiding our true selves from others, and also to a certain extent, ourselves because although we’re very quick at judging others we don’t like being judged ourselves. This has naturally led us to become adept at lying, both to others and to ourselves. Fulfilling all our own personal needs, in particular those relating to power, status and wealth above that of our neighbour is not easy and so lying and cheating has become commonplace across our society in order for us to actually fulfil those needs – to differing levels of success. We then lie further to protect ourselves if we become in danger of being found out and the real personality underneath our “respectable veneer” exposed. In the television series “House” our ingrained societal habit of lying is highlighted in the storylines as an ongoing impediment to a doctor who is interested in obtaining the correct medical diagnosis from the symptoms of an illness. A necessary part of that process being for the patient to tell the truth about who they are and the circumstances under which the illness has potentially manifested.

As a society we will soon face a major challenge - lying will sooner or later become impossible. We already have a number of basic means to identify when someone is lying e.g. the recognition of notable body language manifestations, the use of lie detectors, and forensic legal cross-examination of the facts in a court of law to name but a few. However, in coming years the insight from these methods will be supplemented by more widespread sensitivity to fluidal energy and conscious use of the planetary storage banks within which all earthly information and knowledge is recorded in absolute truth and detail. As more and more people gain access to the truth (and not their or other people’s “truth”) then the act of lying will become futile.

The Plejaren are evolutively ahead of us and so are there already, hence their society is in a very different place to our own. If you wish to strive to evolve then a fundamental requirement of that is to recognise the truth as to where you are as an individual and as a society and then build off that to ever-higher levels of understanding and behaviour. If any of our dreams were realised and if any of us Earth-humans individually or as a group were fortunate enough to spend any time with an individual or a group of Plejaren then I believe this difference between our cultures would come to the forefront very quickly. Bringing our thoughts and psyches into a state of positive, neutral, equalised balance is a key imperative of our present time for the Earth human. Any Earth-human psychic imbalances would be quickly perceived by an individual or a group of Plejaren and they would not be shy in pointing key areas for consideration and development out. I have absolutely no doubt this act would not be done out of malice or any desire to hurt, but it would be delivered in a neutral and kind manner driven by their central cultural desire to evolve. However, I also have no doubt their honesty upon receipt would feel absolutely brutal to us as in no shape or form are we used to having our inner selves exposed and challenged. For all of us Earth-humans, I believe it would be a very challenging experience indeed. I am sure some of us would pass the test and accept the Plejaren knowledge and assistance in the manner it was intended and reap the benefits of, in this instance, an enhanced psyche and consciousness. However, at our current level of development I fear the majority of Earth humans would recoil in horror at the perceived affront of their person and the unveiling of that which had previously been considered most hidden, reject the observation, and impulsively lash out in anger at their “attacker.” I’m sure the Plejaren recognise this and so, for the time being, this remains a contributory factor in our two societies remaining unfortunately apart.

So if you find yourself indulging in the daydream of wanting to meet a Plejaren, be careful what you wish for as I feel there would be much more to it in actuality than ever considered within the comfort zone of a dream. However, dreams are good and they’re fun. Do I still dream of meeting a Plejaren? Yes. Do I think it will happen in my current lifetime? No. Can I still dream? Yes.

Thoughtful contemplation and prayer

On the way home

After the winding, narrow road of life's experiences, from the deepest valley to the edge of a precipice, to the highest point and view of a mountain, where the sun touches the earth; many endure a little suffering, followed by those burdened with great pain, while very few are touched by sheer joy and love alone, all so very close and yet so far from that magnificent peak to be reached in order to recognize the original Ziel and muster it, the one I've searched for so long and which at last I can call OM.

From roots to roses

With pure joy and true love, take the morning dew to animate thyself and let the flower of truth, self-knowledge and wisdom opens in petals, from roots to roses.

Reach out to those who have none, like the sweet scent of a rose, true love and humaneness extend to all without judgement nor conditions.

Similar to how rain fills a gap in the earth, let its essence renew you, and allow no treacherous thorn to crush or overtake the sincere joy now within you.

Make this fragrance the springtime of your everlasting life and share it with fairness and gentleness, even when all seems to have vanished into the midnight moonlight.

And when there is nothing left except a bench to lean on, always remember that honest prayer is also a source of true love and warmth.

Seek its support and it will comfort you, whether you are lying on a bed of stone or cloth during the fall and winter months of your daily existence.

Neutrality, neutral-positive thinking and peace

by Karl Beaney

What real neutrality is (<https://shop.figu.org/schriften/gratisschriften/was-wirkliche-neutralität-ist-a6>)
 - Excerpt from 795th contact, 8th March 2022:

“Billy ... Therefore this means that the effective truth behind all things must be seen and, therethrough, (must be) recognised as well as understood what the actual reason/origin for a statement, case, a behaviour or a deed of a human being is. The cognition of what the true actual reason/origin is - like for example an unjustified accusation, an unjustified treatment or behaviour and so on of a human being - allows it to be recognised whether it is understood by that person whatever he/she generally says, creates feelings/Gefühle¹ in himself/herself, does or advocates, etc. Regarding that I have learned through the living-experience and the experience that barely a human being acts out/lives out that which is really present in himself/herself in this or that form/kind. As a rule he/she sets free, talks and acts and so forth that which are only his/her superficialities, which however are not in conformity with his/her true Wesen², which [his/her true Wesen] he/she can neither find nor live because the jumble of the environment falsely steers him/her - because he/she allows himself/herself to simply be steered and does not consciously think, decide and act himself/herself.”

The terms 'neutral', 'neutrality' and 'neutral-positive thinking' come up again and again in the Creation-energy teaching and associated writings. I have always had the inkling that much more is included in these terms (neutral, neutrality, neutral-positive thinking etc.) when used in Creation-energy based writings. On face value I think most will come to the conclusion that 'neutral' or 'neutrality' means neither positive nor negative, therefore a balance between the two but is that all, or is there really more to these 'neutral' associated terms/words?

From the excerpt above my interpretation/summary of Billy's words is that the truth behind everything must be seen, recognised and understood. If I can fathom the real reason behind another human beings words, actions etc., especially if it concerns an attack, a lie or the like, I am able to recognise whether the 'aggressor' understands that their words, actions or behaviour creates corresponding feelings in themselves. If, in such a case, the 'aggressor' does not understand the actual reason for their statement, behaviour etc. this has an effect on what they say, do etc. and in turn the person in question not being their true self. If one is not being one's true self then one is steered through life on a false path influenced by external factors rather than internal factors. Of course there is much more to Billy's words than I have summarised so please make your own understanding/interpretation.

When I read Contact Report 795 for a greater understanding of the context regarding the excerpt above I learned that Bermunda is amazed by and is enquiring as to how Billy has withstood all the lies, attacks and maliciousness that has been directed at and inflicted upon him. Billy talks a little bit about his upbringing before he states the excerpt included above. I conclude from this that Billy is therefore saying that he can withstand all the attacks and maliciousness because he understands true neutrality. On reading the excerpt for the first time it was hard for me to see what the words have in common with neutrality. Only on further reading and consideration does it all start to fit in place.

If one can fathom the real reason behind someone else's actions or words one can act appropriately and treat this person accordingly. Therefore, in the case of an unjustified attack for example, one can treat the originator with understanding and peace instead of hatred and retaliation. Similarly, if one is fully conscious of what one says, does, thinks etc. and why one thinks and acts so, then one is not only aware of oneself and one's motivations, intentions etc. but is also in turn aware of one's strengths, weaknesses, faults, preferences and so on. All this is of benefit and is essential should one want to consciously evolve and learn.

Neutrality is necessary to see the truth and to ask rational, logical questions to get to the heart of a matter. If one is not neutral then an inclination to one side or another is already present, therefore a preconceived notion is harboured and any new information has to pass through this filter. Without neutrality one has, to some extent, already made one's mind up, consciously or unconsciously, as to how something is or how it is supposed to be. If one does not think neutrally then one's words, actions, behaviour and so on will not represent one's true Wesen and therefore neutrality is lost. And this is lost at the source of not thinking, or at least trying to think, in a neutral manner. Very far reaching effects for harbouring an opinion, belief, view or the like that has most likely been taken on board during one's upbringing/education.

But how does one acquire this neutrality? After all Billy declares "barely a human being acts out/ lives out that which is really present in him (or her) self in this or that form/kind."

Excerpt from 'Introduction to meditation' (German/English version) Page 346

661. With any meditative process only purely neutral thoughts may be thought and put into practice.

662. As it is with the daily thinking, also here a fully neutral discipline of thinking must exist, which is why one must not think NEGATIVELY or POSITIVELY in any form.

663. Therefore, if there is talk about NEUTRAL-positive thinking, then that does not mean that one has to think positively, rather NEUTRALLY in every respect, which corresponds to the actual positive value.

664. Thus NEUTRAL-POSITIVE.

We have all heard the saying "positive mental attitude" and "the human being is what he thinks" but before coming to the FIGU material I never read or heard elsewhere about neutral thinking being the correct way to think. Sure, it is obvious that if a person thinks negatively, such as "life is rubbish and I hate..." it is likely that life will be not so great. On the flip side we have heard others encouraging someone to think in a positive manner when things are not going well. According to Billy's writings both (thinking only positively or only negatively) are not correct.

With a bit of observation it is clear that neutral thinking is not commonly known about, not least encouraged, understood or taught, on planet Earth. That is little wonder when one notices that some form of belief is the norm on our planet, be it belief in some god or gods (it doesn't matter which one(s)) or a belief in a false philosophy, a false life view, a false lifestyle etc. Even if someone professes not to be religious then belief still plays a mighty role in every persons life here on planet Earth because just living on a planet where belief is so mighty one can not escape the effects of belief, even if one does not follow a religion (for more info about the power and effects of belief see Bernadette Brand's article 'Resilience and Perseverance' included in Contact Report 866: https://www.futureofmankind.co.uk/Billy_Meier/Contact_Report_866 & Brigett Keller's article 'Spooks and Other Energetic Shenanigans' included in Contact Report 868: https://www.futureofmankind.co.uk/Billy_Meier/Contact_Report_868). Belief can manifest in many forms such as egoism, feelings of superiority or inferiority, greed for money/possessions/status or power, vanity, fame seeking, addiction, politics, indifference etc. Consequently views, opinions, interactions and behaviours are influenced by the chosen belief(s). Hence we have huge amounts of hatred, strife, inequality, confusion, wars, hunger, pollution, homelessness, destruction and all other imaginable bad things that can currently be seen.

It soon becomes clear that if we would put our beliefs aside and would endeavour to think in a neutral manner many of our troublesome issues would improve. That is because thinking in a neutral manner involves recognising things as they actually are in reality without holding onto some bias and letting the bias influence our thoughts and actions. This in turn would create a unification of the parties involved and would ultimately lead to peace and harmony, because the reality of the situation (and it's joint/mutual recognition) would unite people. In this way any beliefs, customs, opinions, traditions, views and the like are put aside in order to neutrally observe the reality of the situation and then act accordingly.

Neutrality is consistent because, as mentioned, neutrality is founded in reality and its truth. So it will not matter if people from different countries, families, communities, traditions etc. come together to assess a situation, if they are striving to see the situation in a neutral manner they will come to the same conclusion or, at least, a peaceful compromise. Oftentimes when human beings doggedly hold onto a belief, assumption, tradition etc. conflict is the result. Neutral thinking really is the first step to humanity creating a peaceful and progressive world. When human beings begin to think neutrally and approach issues/life in a neutral manner we can really start to make huge progress. Neutrality is the starting block for peace.

Neutrality is not only the path to create peace in the world, first and foremost neutrality creates peace in the individual making an effort with neutrality and neutral-positive thinking. Because of the several millennia long and planet wide belief-oriented thinking us Earthlings have to learn the art of neutrality and neutral-positive thinking anew, and this will take time, effort and practice, as highlighted in the following excerpt:

Excerpt from 'Might of the thoughts' – Chapter 20

“May every human being therefore search for the real truth and, from this, bake a loaf of bread which is nourishment for himself/herself as well as for his/her neighbour. In this sense, may he/she then break the bread into small, bite sized pieces so that he/she and all his/her neighbours - who are the whole of humanity - can consume and digest them without effort. In this sense the human being must learn to recognise himself/herself in his/her real, innermost, creationally-given nature, in order to create from it the power from which his/her own inner nature must be created in accord with the creational pattern, so that the human being in fact becomes himself/herself. He/she is thereby able to combat and resolve his/her own affliction and that of his/her fellow human beings, and he/she recognises what he/she really and truthfully does; consequently, he/she no longer leads a life as if in a semi-conscious state. The human being thereby shows and reveals to himself/herself the way to the peace, to the real love, to the true freedom, to the understanding, to the power and to the harmony in equalisedness. The price for that is the constant watchfulness and the conscious effort to always keep everything under control and tend and nurture it, because, otherwise, with a slackening off, that which is negating and negative very quickly gains the upper hand again. This advice is great enough to be followed and to form one’s life in a healthy, neutral-positive-equalised and powerful way, but it is too great to be simple, which is why it is connected with an extraordinary amount of effort and affliction and with the making of many errors which the human being must take upon himself/herself if he/she wants to be knowingly evolutive, affirming of life and powerful. It does not happen without effort, affliction and making errors, but it all happens without compulsion, because that is in no kind and wise necessary for progress to that which is higher.”

¹ The feeling (das Gefühl) emerging from the thoughts, i.e., (das Fühlen) the feeling from out of the thoughts

² There is no English term that conveys the meaning of the German term Wesen, that is why the same word is used: Wesen

English Description: A Wesen is an independently existing life form with its own individuality and personality in an impulse-based, instinct-based or conscious consciousness-form with evolution-possibilities that are specifically directed towards everything, and with its own physical, psychical (relating to the psyche), conscious, part-conscious, unconscious, impulse- or instinct-based development-forms (human being, animal, creature and plants).

Democracy

Today in the 21st century most of our world leaders tell their citizens that they live in a Democracy!!! This term is also used as a pretext for some governments to militarily occupy or surreptitiously manipulate other countries to forcefully replace leaders that are deemed undemocratic, or simply are not seen as conforming to the supposed 'free world' way of thinking, the underlying reason for these interventions are invariably to coerce and control governments and leaders in order to exploit the population and take land and resources.

The word 'democracy' is derived from the Greek word "Demokratia" which is made up of two words: "Demos" meaning people and "Kratia" meaning rule. The English Oxford dictionary defines Democracy as 'A political system that allows the citizens to participate in political decision-making, or to elect representatives to government bodies.' It is certainly clear that all those countries that purport to being a democracy allow for the latter part but hardly any, allow for citizens to participate in political decision making and if they do then this is in the form of referendums.

I will use the UK as an example as it is purported to be a pillar of democracy. According to Wikipedia there have only been three referendums in the United Kingdom.

- 1) 1975 European Communities membership referendum
- 2) 2011 Alternative Vote referendum
- 3) 2016 European Union membership referendum

Historical records show that 'The Reform Act of 1832 increased voter suffrage from only about five percent to seven percent by broadening the property qualifications to include small landowners, tenant farmers, and shopkeepers. By creating 67 constituencies, the passing of this bill marks the start of democracy in the UK.'

Second Reform Act, 1867

In 1866, all voters had to be male adults over 21 years of age. The right to vote was still based upon a property qualification.

By the early 1860s around 1.43 million could vote out of a total population of 30 million. In 1867, the Conservative government introduced the Parliamentary Reform Act.

This increased the electorate to almost 2.5 million.

Third Reform Act, 1884

By the 1880s it was widely recognised that voters in counties deserved the same political rights as those in the boroughs.

This led to the 1884 Parliamentary Reform Act:

- the Act created a uniform franchise for both county and borough
- it applied to the United Kingdom as a whole
- it enfranchised a significant number of voters
- approximately two in three men now had the vote - almost 18 per cent of the total population
- however, plural voting was permitted (whereby a man could have more than one vote in certain circumstances)

Representation of the People Act, 1918

In June 1917 the House of Commons passed the Representation of the People Act. The following year the Act was approved by the House of Lords and became law.

By 1918 there was a general feeling that the horrors of World War One had to be for something positive. Many men returning from war would not be able to vote under the 1884 laws.

The Representation of the People Act gave the vote to all men over 21, whether they owned property or not.

The act gave the vote to women over the age of 30 who met a property qualification, or whose husband did. This represented 8.5 million women - two thirds of the total population of women in the UK. Representation of the People Act, 1928

In 1928 women were finally given the franchise on the same terms as men. All adults over 21 could vote.

So, since 1832 the UK has called itself a democracy even though the citizens have had no say in the introduction of numerous laws, taxes, war policies, exploitation of other countries, supplying of weapons, espionage etc... All decisions have been made by political parties who had their own policies and interests in the forefront and only listen to their citizens if they believe they would lose the next election and therefore their power and control.

Contact Report (CR) 538. Ptaah:

25. Democracy requires that from all sides, i.e. from the rulers, the parties and the people, everything must be handled, transformed and carried out uniformly and in peace, and that no violence, coercion or reprisals are used by any side.

26. A true democracy must therefore be built from the ground up without violence, coercion, etc., and consequently no acts of violence, coercion or reprisals of any kind must be used by any side.

27. And as an explanation of what we Plejaren understand by democracy, I will set out the following:

28. It is about 52,000 years ago that true democracy was established among all peoples in our Plejaren, and with it a lasting peace and extensive freedom, which has also been established since then, by prohibiting all undemocratic forms of government and their actions.

29. This also led to the final peace among all peoples, so that since then the Plejaren have lived in true peace and freedom.

30. For the peoples themselves want peace and freedom, but not war, despotism or dictatorship.

31. Wars, despotism, dictatorship and tyranny of all kinds always come from rulers, from parties, parliaments, military and secret services, etc., as well as from rulers and their supporters and followers, but never from the peoples themselves, for they are fundamentally opposed to wars, discord and unfreedom, etc.

32. The whole thing was based on the recognition that forms of government based on parliaments and parties or on despotism, dictatorship or republics etc. are contrary to any true democracy and are a fraud against the peoples because they are deceived by untenable promises, propaganda and lies etc.

33. This is how our forefathers took as their starting point what has survived to this day and confirms our true form of democracy, that when the peoples have to make their own decisions under their own responsibility, their true and uninfluenced opinions are brought to bear.

34. Contrary to this, it is a fact that no personality of their own and free decision is brought about if there are not popular leaders elected by the people, but some forms of government and parties which may influence the elections through propaganda etc. as well as through vote buying and vote rigging or through violence and coercion.

35. If any of these things are put up for election and the voters vote yes or no to them, then this is usually not their own opinion and vote, but one which is influenced and imposed by propaganda, violence or by buying votes.

36. This means, however, that true democracy and understanding of it are already stifled at the core, because it only allows people to vote for or against something and to be there without being able to express their own opinion responsibly, to speak out openly and to be considered.

37. As a result, all other voters are not allowed to express their personal opinions in public, which must be the opposite in a true democracy.

38. But if all that is done is propaganda, if there is no open discussion of the matter, if all citizens who have something to say about it are not listened to, then this is dictatorial either way – determined by the rulers, parliaments and parties.

39. In this way, the people are only allowed to vote yes or no in an election, without the possibility of expressing a personal and direct opinion, therefore the vote cannot be justified.

40. In a true democracy, however, every person called to vote must be able to express his or her free opinion about a pro or con and be able to make clear what his or her view and opinion, as well as his or her desire and the reason for accepting or rejecting the person standing for election, is.

41. All forms of government which do not have an actual representation of the people elected by the people as a whole show that only the forces of government and parties are called to vote on predetermined matters, whatever the relationship and whatever the matters to be voted on.

42. The individual citizen of any nation has nothing to say in this matter which corresponds to nothing more and nothing less than a tyrannical and dictatorial system, under the guise of an alleged democracy.

43. So, in any case, the big problem is always a form of government of this kind and all its instruments, which prevents true democracy.

44. Such forms of government, however, lead to more or less serious conflicts in all peoples and social strata, and for the time being of course also in the parties, parliaments, government circles and among the individuals themselves.

45. This proves that the methods of elections and 'referenda' of this kind are worthless and always lead to the failure of true democracy.

46. Such a policy successfully conceals all approaches to a real solution of all problems and the fact that any form of instrument of government is completely wrong and must be replaced by true popular leadership and democracy.

47. If instruments of government are given and not true democracy and popular leaderships elected by the people alone, then governments constantly and inexorably provoke conflict because only that side of society is represented which is always in accordance with the parties, classes, sects, rulers and those in power, and which votes in their favour.

48. Forms of government of all kinds, whether halfway good or bad, never represent the peoples and also do not act and speak in their name, but their actions and speaking are based only on their own plans and wishes, etc.

49. This is what we Plejaren are deeply aware of, that no form of government of any kind can ever represent the peoples, but only representations of the people as determined by the peoples.

50. This realization was used by our ancestors to build a true democracy encompassing all peoples.

51. Only a representation of the people for the people is democratic, whereas a representation is a fraud.

52. And it was only through the recognition of this fact by our forefathers that the instrument of democracy could be brought into being and all the problems which had constantly led to popular discontent, as well as to discord, lack of freedom and, in many cases, also to uprisings, revolutions and war, as well as to immense destruction, could be solved.

53. In this way, all-encompassing people's democracies were created and realised on our worlds, putting an end to all despotic and dictatorial forms of government and rulers etc., and giving all power only to the peoples and implementing it through elected leaders of the people.

54. And this has proved its worth, according to the earthly sense of mankind, for more than 52,000 years, and consequently there have never been any more uprisings, revolutions, popular discontent or small or large wars since then.

55. Thus our distant ancestors as a whole have found the final solution to all political problems on all our worlds and have shown all peoples the way out of the path of the dictatorial rulers and ruled and into a true democracy based solely on the extensive power of the people, without representatives or substitutes.

Unfortunately, we are a long way off from any form of true Democracy on this planet. So, at the beginning of the 21st century what type of people are our leaders?

CR 618, Ptaah:

6. Yes here ..., our last research in this regard was already four years ago, in which the values in relation to psychopath narcissists in all areas of office of the earthly rulers, governments and administrations etc. show a changing average of approx. 72–78 per cent, calculated on the basis of the total number of all rulers of all governments, offices and administrations etc.

7. With regard to psychopath narcissists in the total earthly population, our research showed an average of 24–27 per cent.

So approximately 75% of those that govern us and make decisions on our behalf are Psychopaths, so it is important to understand what a Psychopath is.

FIGU-Special-Bulletin No. 68

Ptaah:

It is generally difficult for the non-professional to recognise psychopaths as such, because the psychopathy is often associated with a near-perfect acting talent, consequently, in the terrestrial realm, even experts are therethrough misled and provide wrong assessment and value certifications for psychopaths. But this is not surprising when we consider that, on Earth, professionals such as psychologists and psychiatrists, in regard to their capabilities, very often think a great deal of themselves, and overvalue their abilities and understanding. Consequently often wrong appraisals and wrong evaluations are made.

Billy

Which is of course denied by those "experts".

Ptaah

Which happens out of self-protection and boastfulness and so on. But listen to what is observed in relation to the behaviour-patterns of psychopaths in many different regards. There are thereby many factors which I want to list in a decisive wise. Thus, a greater number of the following unvalues are usually characteristic of psychopaths:

1. Lack of logical decisions
2. Lack of rational conduct
3. Irresponsible activity
4. Frequent change of sexual partner
5. Pathological lying, mendacity
6. Making untenable promises, breaking them
7. Exaggerated thoughts and feelings with regard to the values of the own person
8. Pretended, i.e. feigned charm
9. Boredom
10. Deceitful behaviour
11. Parasitism
12. Deficiency with regard to real and long-term results in many forms and wises
13. Manipulative behaviour with regard to the fellow human beings
14. Selfish lifestyle
14. Selfish lifestyle
15. Dazzling, i.e. seducing and deluding, of the fellow human beings
16. Lack of a guilt-consciousness
17. Lack of behavioural control
18. Imponderability
19. Imperiousness according to the principle of "after me the deluge"
20. Consciencelessness
21. Pathological craving to defame
22. Sense of unfairness
23. A great poverty of feeling due to corresponding thoughts
24. Endorsement of the death penalty
25. Endorsement of torture
26. Hate mentality
27. Egoism
28. Penchant for guilefulness, deceit
29. Cheatful manipulation behaviour
30. Lack of guilt consciousness
31. Lack of bearing responsibility
32. Lack of deep-reaching thoughts and feelings
33. Lack of behavioural control
34. Lack of self-responsibility
35. Absence of concernment and feelings for others
36. The absence of setting long-term and realistic results to be achieved
37. Remorselessness
38. Lack of empathy
39. Coldness of thoughts and feelings
40. Irresponsibility towards fellow human beings
41. Willingness for revenge and retaliation
42. Intriguefulness
43. Might-behaviour/greed for might
44. Irresponsible speeches
45. Irresponsible agitation
46. Great criminal energy
47. Very extreme impulsiveness
48. Violation of laws, recommendations, ordinances, regulations, prohibitions and directions, and so on.
49. Break of promises
50. Lack of self control
51. Unhonesty
52. Disloyalty
53. Scrupulousness
54. Authoritarian
55. Penchant for sadism

- | | |
|----------------------------------------------------------|----------------------------------------------|
| 56. Falseness, deviousness | 57. Willingness for acts of fighting and war |
| 58. Pathological craving for profit | 59. Avariciousness |
| 60. Antisocial behaviour | 61. Penchant for harassment/mobbing |
| 62. Self-praise, self-adulation | 63. Penchant for denunciation |
| 64. Pathological angeriness | 65. Lack of remorse |
| 66. Lack of ability to have deep feelings for the others | 67. Severe impulsiveness |
| 68. Penchant for cheating and swindle | 69. Lack of self-cognition |
| 70. Unconcernedness | |

These are the 70 most important behavioural factors that are characteristic of psychopaths. The whole is a scale according to which the human being can assess himself/herself as well as other human beings in relation to a psychopathic character-pattern. The 70 listed negative characteristics serve as a measuring stick for the given standard measure of the psychopathy, to be assessed in such a wise that the more the characteristics apply to one person or another, the more a psychopathic behaviour-pattern is given. If 18 of the 70 negative characteristics apply to oneself or to another human being, then a comprehensive and deep-reaching psychopathy must be spoken of.

So, with regards to the approximately 25% of those in Governments around the world that aren't psychopaths and probably want to do their best for their citizens and country, hardly any would be able to get into a position to change things for the better, and those that do, will not last long as they are constantly exposed to the character patterns exhibited by the Psychopaths, who will at any cost seek to undermine any and all that threaten their position of power and influence.

CR 865, Quetzal:

.....according to our observations and findings of today 96.3 per cent of the Earth's leaders are absolutely and therefore completely incapable of their office. But this has been the case since time immemorial, which is why only greed for power, hostility, greed for wealth, hatred, revenge and retaliation, as well as war and terror, etc., have steadily been in the foreground, which has remained so until today and for the time being there is no hope whatsoever that this will change for the better.

War & Bloodshed

Today, across our planet armed conflicts are on the rise because of governmental policies and interference, and the never-ending development and supply of weapons and ammunition.

According to the Geneva Academy of International Humanitarian Law and Human Rights they are monitoring more than 110 armed conflicts.

MIDDLE EAST AND NORTH AFRICA: MORE THAN 45 ARMED CONFLICTS are currently taking place throughout the Middle East and North Africa in the following territories: Cyprus, Egypt, Iraq, Israel, Libya, Morocco, Palestine, Syria, Turkey, Yemen and Western Sahara.

The majority are non-international (NIACs), involving a multitude of armed non-state actors and foreign interventions by Western powers, Russia, and neighbouring countries – except for the NIACs taking place in Egypt and Turkey. 'Syria is the most affected country in the region. Several multiple and overlapping NIACs are taking place in the country – involving numerous armed groups who fight against the government and against each other –, along with two military occupations and three international armed conflicts'.

AFRICA: MORE THAN 35 ARMED CONFLICTS (NIACs) taking place in Burkina Faso, Cameroon, the Central African Republic (CAR), the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ethiopia,

Mali, Mozambique, Nigeria, Senegal, Somalia, South Sudan and Sudan. Several armed groups – fighting against government forces and/or against each other’s – are involved in these conflicts. Western powers and/or neighbouring countries are intervening in the NIACs that take place in Burkina Faso, Mali, Mozambique, Nigeria, and Somalia. ‘CAR is on the top of the list with several NIACs involving multiple armed groups. The Government is involved in NIACs against a wide array of rebel groups, including the anti-Balaka and the ex-Séléka. There are also parallel non-international armed conflicts due to the infighting between various armed groups’.

ASIA: 21 ARMED CONFLICTS. Asia is the theatre of 19 non-international armed conflicts (NIACs) involving 19 armed groups. These are happening in Afghanistan, India, Myanmar, Pakistan and The Philippines. Two international armed conflicts – between respectively India and Pakistan, and between India and China – are also taking place in the region. ‘Pakistan and the Philippines are on the top of the list with six NIACs for each country. In Pakistan, governmental forces are fighting various armed groups acting throughout the territory, particularly Taliban-affiliated groups in the Federally Administered Tribal Areas and independence fighters in Balochistan. In the Philippines, most NIACs are taking place in the Mindanao region where government forces are fighting against several armed groups, including the Moro National Liberation Front, the Moro Islamic Liberation Front, the Bangsamoro Islamic Freedom Fighters, the Maute Group and the Abu Sayyaf Group’.

EUROPE: SEVEN ARMED CONFLICTS. The following military occupations constitute the majority of armed conflicts that are taking place in Europe, four out of seven conflicts: Russia is currently occupying Crimea (Ukraine), Transdnistria (Moldova), as well as South Ossetia and Abkhazia (Georgia), while Armenia is occupying parts of Nagorno Karabakh (Azerbaijan). Europe is also the theatre of an international armed conflict (IAC) between Ukraine and Russia, and of two non-international armed conflicts (NIACs) in Ukraine opposing governmental forces with the self-proclaimed ‘People’s Republics’ of Donetsk and Luhansk in eastern Ukraine.

LATIN AMERICA: SIX ARMED CONFLICTS. The six non-international armed conflicts that are taking place in the region are split evenly between Mexico and Colombia. ‘While Colombia has experienced one of the longest non-international armed conflicts (NIACs) in modern times and is still the theatre of three NIACs, Mexico is characterized by three NIACs involving gangs’ drug cartels. This is the first time we classify armed violence involving criminal organizations as NIACs and we did so given the level of organization of the cartels and intensity of violence’.

However, for these conflicts to occur and weapons to be used, humans are needed who either have already killed and are bloodthirsty for more, those willing citizens subjected to a one-sided rhetoric through state-controlled media who are gullible and foolish enough to take up arms but who have no concept of what it means to kill and slaughter their fellow human beings and those forced into war through conscription.

But killing another human being unless there is a need to protect and preserve one’s own or another’s life from death and consequently justifies the use of controlled violence when no other option is available, is so negatively contrary to creational laws that it has an extreme and immediate debilitating effect on the psyche, which can clearly be seen with veterans who suffer from severe trauma after the event, although our leaders always try to hide this from the public and instead celebrate those who are the best at killing, by giving them medals and celebrating them as heroes, with a well done and keep up the good work of murdering your fellow humans.

Although our worlds psychopathic leaders are more than happy to start these wars and send countless human beings to their death, one thing is certain they will never be on the front line leading the so-called charge, because if there was any chance of their lives being endangered, they would be the first to negotiate a peace.

But the real problem today is that our leaders and their crazy scientists have developed and are constantly researching the most advanced, chemical weapons, biological weapons, genetic manipulations, artificial intelligence, and weapons of mass destruction, including weapons harnessing the elements, all for the purpose of retaining might and the destruction of their fellow humans, and being psychopaths are willing to use them without any consideration for the average citizen.

But as our population increases and subsequently increasing thoughts of violence, revenge, retaliation, greed, hatred, etc... are sent out with our electromagnetic swinging waves, through the We-Subconscious and law of Cause and Effect, inevitably more bloodshed and violence across our planet is becoming common place and we appear to be more accepting and complacent of the entire situation.

Criminal organisations are flourishing, who regard their fellow humans as a commodity to buy and sell, exploit, or kill as they see fit, there is also constant fighting and killing amongst these gangs over the trafficking of drugs, weapons, humans of all sexes and ages, body parts and all other terrible things, all for money and power. Then there are fanatics who carry out suicide bombings, mass shootings, honour killings amongst family members, murder for any number of reasons and even rising numbers of children who are willing to kill others.

If you just look at Film and Television you are hard put to find anything to watch that doesn't contain violence, killing, sex, revenge, or the gain of material wealth, and with the technological age the most popular immersive online interactive computer games contain the same negative traits and are mostly played by the younger generation currently there are over 3 billion gamers. If you have a healthy psyche and can think in a neutral, rational and logical way, then you can be exposed to these negative values and see them for what they are, far from any Creational Laws, but unfortunately many humans all too easily give into these impulses and go onto acting them out as they are devoid of any moral or ethical compass.

BEAM SSSC, 6/04/2023. Excerpt from; The Values of Ethics and Morals.

The psyche is therefore not a component of the consciousness or of the human beings at all, rather a current state of their thought-feeling world, which is expressed in a negative or positive wise. This, however, is a delicate and even taboo subject, especially nowadays, because the human beings of Earth are weakening increasingly and more extreme because they have been and are being guided more and more by technology and are losing themselves in it, as a result of which they are paying less and less attention to themselves and their selves and are simply moving in the trend of progress, consequently they are only being ruled over by higher authorities and the banks and so forth, and they are getting lost in themselves, without realising this due to their low intelligentum, that is to say, their non-thinking. Thus there are more and more inhibition levels for them, more and more psychical, that is to say, mental-emotional complaints and injuries, for which, however, there is no help, which is why more and more human beings end up in suicide, and indeed have done so for many years, and often for no apparent reason. In addition, over their entire lifespan they develop due to the influence of the environment surrounding them and all the events that affect them, consequently they can change in the course of life and develop different mentality.

There has never been a more important time to create Peace amongst ourselves and the only way to achieve this is to change our own and others thought processes by promoting peace in any way we can, making others aware of the correct peace symbol and not the death rune, partaking in the regular peace meditations, distributing leaflets, writing to all and everyone etc... We all have a duty to bring about peace on Earth and unless we do the consequences couldn't be more apparent for those who can still think in a rational and logical way. However, except for very few of us we are not changing for the better and with our ineffectual leadership this can now only play out as the prophecies have warned us.

CR 215. Quetzal:

160. Your words are of correctness.

161. Thus, I will offer Henoah's prophecies in an understandable form.

162. So listen, then:

163. If the human being of the Earth continues to live in the same style as they have done up to now, forming their thoughts and feelings in the same manner, indulging in the same actions as they have done hitherto, then the words of the prophecies of Henoah could not be any clearer.

164. The point in time at which these prophecies will begin to be fulfilled will be when a Pope will no longer reside in Rome.

165. All of Europe will then fall victim to a terrible punishment by evil powers.

166. The Christian religion will collapse and the churches and monasteries will end up in ruins and ashes.

167. Monstrous forces will be created by science and will be released by the military forces and armies as well as by terrorists, causing great destruction.

168. Millions and even billions of human beings will be killed by acts of terrorism, by wars and civil wars; and finally, in some parts of the world, every third human being, and in other places, every fourth human being, will lose his or her life.

169. The nations of the East will rise against the nations of the West, the West against the East.

170. Many deaths will be inflicted upon the human beings by fighter and bomber aircraft, and bombs and rockets will destroy and annihilate smaller and larger villages and cities.

171. The human beings will be completely powerless against all this and will live through 888 days of Hell on Earth, suffering hunger and plagues which will claim even more lives than the war itself.

172. The time will be severe as never before experienced on the Earth. Ultimately, nothing can be bought or sold any longer.

173. All provisions will be rationed; and if a human being steals even a small piece of bread, he/she will have to pay for it with their life.

174. Many waters will mix with human blood and turn red, as once in the past the Nile in Egypt turned red with blood.

175. And it will be that the fanatics of Islam will rise up against the countries of Europe and all will shake and quiver.

176. Everything in the West will be destroyed; England will be conquered and thrown down to the lowest level of misery.

177. And the fanatics and warriors of Islam will retain their power for a long time.

178. However, not only Europe will be affected but ultimately all the countries and human beings of the Earth, as the great horror expands to a war that will encompass the entire world.

179. After the turn of the millennium, the papacy will exist for only a short period.

180. Pope John Paul II is the third from last in this position.

181. After him, only one additional pontificate will follow.

182. Then a Pontifex Maximus follows who will be known as Petrus Romanus.

(Note: 181, refers to Pope Benedict XVI, and the last, is Pope Francis who has just turned 87.)

183. Under his religious rule, the end of the Catholic Church will come, a total collapse becoming inevitable.

184. That will be the beginning of the worst catastrophe that will ever have befallen the human beings and the Earth.

185. Many Catholic clerics, priests, bishops, cardinals and many others will be killed and their blood will flow in streams.

186. But also the reformed version of Christianity will become just as infinitely small, as does Catholicism.

187. Due to the fault of scientists, enormous power will be seized by the power-hungry and their military, their warriors and terrorists, and power will be seized as well through laser weapons of many types, but also via atomic, chemical and biological weapons.

188. Also concerning genetic technology, enormous misuse will occur, because this will be unrestrainedly exploited for the purposes of war, not lastly due to the cloning of human beings for warring purposes, as this was practised in ancient times with the descendants of Henoah in the regions of Sirius.

189. However, this will not be all of the horrors; as in addition to the genetic technology and the chemical weapons, far worse and more dangerous and more deadly weapons of mass destruction will be produced and will be used.

190. The irresponsible politicians will unscrupulously exercise their power, assisted by scientists and obedient military forces serving them, who together hold a deadly sceptre and will create clone-like beings which will be bred in a total lack of conscience and will be scientifically manipulated to become killer machines. Division by division and devoid of any feelings, they will destroy, murder and annihilate everything. resulting in a turning away from the USA.....

...200. However, the great war will hardly be avoidable because the human beings of the Earth will probably not accept the directions towards the better, therewith towards true love, true freedom and real peace, striving instead only towards wealth, pleasure and riches and for all manner of material values and unrestricted power.

201. Thus, huge and deadly formations of tanks will roll across the countries while fighter planes and rockets sweep through the air and bring death, ruin, destruction and annihilation to countries and human beings. 202. And the bad time will come, during which also the militaries and armies will cause out-of-control, great, wild and evil devastations and unimaginable massacres of the human beings, who will be forced to watch the wild activities powerlessly.

203. Your and our warnings will be cast into the wind by the majority of Earth humanity, even though quite a bit could still be saved and the very worst could be prevented if your and our words of love, peace, freedom, and wisdom would be acted upon.

204. But even that, unfortunately, is doubtful.

205. If the Third World War will actually happen – as calculations and observations appear to indicate to be probable now and also during the approaching few decades, then, as now, the civilian population will above all have to bear the brunt of the enormous suffering in tremendous numbers in this entire catastrophe and, last but not least, the fault of the irresponsible scientists who by cloning will create human machines for military purposes, devoid of conscience and feelings, and will create immensely deadly and all-annihilating computer-like weapons.

206. At the same time, the danger could become reality that the human combat machines, the military clones, will gain their independence and under their own management will bring death, devastation, destruction and annihilation to the human beings of the Earth and to the planet.

207. The entire planet will become an arena of unparalleled suffering, which will never have existed before on the Earth up to that time.

208. The cruel happenings will last about 888 days and cause civilisation to collapse..

Unfortunately, on top of the impulses from the We-Subconscious there are additional factors to consider regarding our penchant for bloodshed on this planet. Part of the reason lies in our somewhat chequered lineage, when long ago our genetic code was altered by our creator-rulers, to make us into fighting machines.

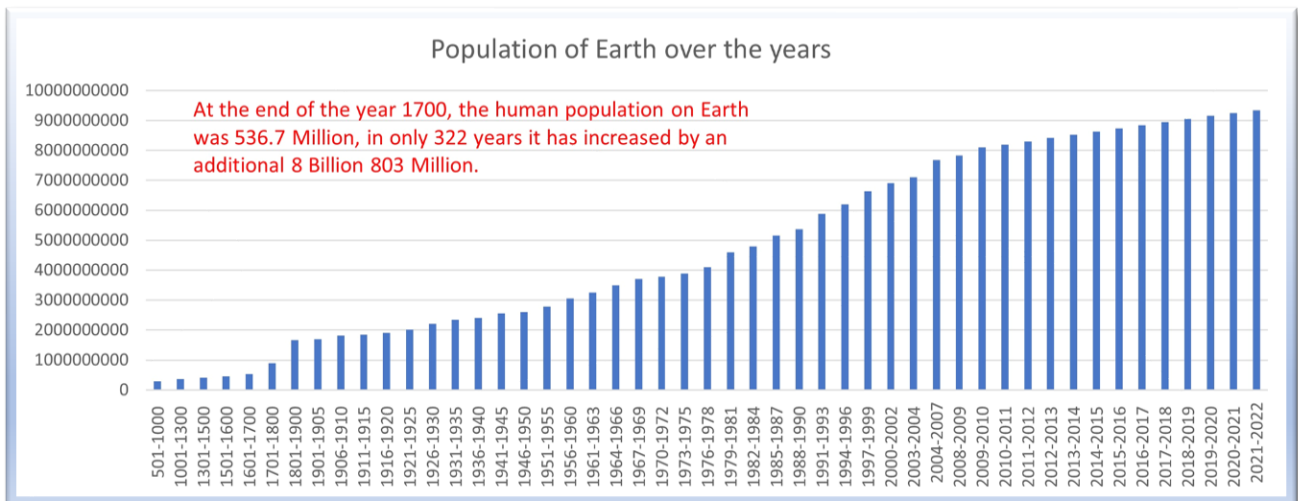

BEAM, From the depths of outer space, Pages 614-7

.....Admittedly, it must be said that all of this is only possible due to the degeneration of the accordingly manipulated gene, because precisely, as a result, the evil or the purely negative always pushes to the fore. This is also the reason why, for example, that with revolutionary and war actions, the human being falls prey to brutality and bloodlust once he/she has discovered the ease of killing, if he/she overcomes the inhibition to kill, which normally always exists in the human being despite the genetic manipulation, if this is not prevented by an illness or by an emotion, etc. This also means that there is no inherent evil in human beings in the sense that a human being could only be evil, and on up of that simply from birth, as is so gladly claimed by those who want to see only the evil and everything negative in human beings. Although the human being is equipped with negative and positive from the very beginning of his/her existence, it is not in the kind and wise that he/she would be ausgeartet in the one form or another, because truthly an equalisedness exists in this regard, through which the human being actually only first becomes viable and fit for life in the face of all hardships affecting him/her from the outside and all external influences of all kinds. Joined together and used in the right form, the two factors of negative and positive yield an overall value which makes the life-form of the human being an extremely resilient form of life which possesses a fighting nature oriented towards creational natural laws and recommendations and the required capabilities for this, however, without getting very badly out of control of the good human nature, The creator-rulers, however, who were also originally human beings of this kind, committed the insanity of eliminating from themselves their gene related to this, through which they lost all combativeness and resistance capabilities and also oriented their entire thinking and actions accordingly, which had the result that they became completely enfeebled. When they were then attacked by aggressors, they failed and were subjugated. Secretly they then procreated the ones capable of fighting and performed the genetic manipulations on them, as a result of which, the new races with the most different skin colours then developed in secret, which were then deployed against the aggressors and also prevailed against them.

Therefore, the creator-rulers were themselves to blame for their degeneration and from the thus arising necessity, procreated the new human beings, who actually again possessed all the natural prerequisites and consequently were capable of fighting and viable. But this was not enough for the creator-rulers, which is why they carried out the genetic manipulations, in order to make the new peoples more aggressive than they were by nature. Therefore, in certain respects, they simply strengthened certain factors through the genetic manipulation, through which the manipulated ones became actual fighting machines, however, still provided with the possibility that they could normalise themselves again in a controlled manner through evolution, which, however, required timeframes of millions of years and therefore continues even today, which is indeed evident with the Earth-humans. Through the genetic manipulation, the negative or the evil, as the Earth-human generally understands this, had been particularly strongly and unnaturally aggressively characterised at that time, which is why even today, it is not yet strongly diminished within the Earth-humans to such an extent, that they could not get very badly out of control of the good human nature again, and indeed, in every respect and so therefore by the excessive procreation of descendants, which has led to the overpopulation and all the evils of all kinds resulting from this as well as to religious-sectarian insanity and imbecility in many fanatical forms and manners, whereby altogether, these not only threaten the destruction of the planet in the end, but even the destruction of the entire environment and of life in all its forms in general. This thinking and acting of the Earth-human represents a relapse phase into the original state of the genetic manipulation, through which, as back then in the early times, everything ausartet and all evils got out of control, which is why back then, the creator-rulers also saw another reason therein to again eliminate the genetically manipulated ones. This phase of relapse is particularly strongly pronounced today, especially in military and revolutionary concerns as well as in religious sectarian machinations. Through the military drills as well as through the politically malicious campaigns and the religious sectarian fanaticism and the criminality of all kinds, the control over the positive is lost, which is swallowed up and suppressed by the negative, from which, in turn, a state of intoxication with the negative-evil arises which is uncontrollably indulged in and lived accordingly.

Overpopulation and Environmental Destruction!

As of 31st December 2023, at midnight CET the latest population scan of the Earth by the Plejaren shows exactly 9,446,218,012 an increase of 107,043,914 humans in one year.

We have never been in this position before and we are putting a catastrophic strain on our planet, its resources and nature itself through an immense destruction of our natural environment, but we seem oblivious to the whole situation, and believe we can carry on breeding unabated without any consequences.

BEAM/Arahat Athersata (AA) P40

7. Preservation of the human species does not lie in the formula of simple multiplication, as this is proclaimed by the irrational teachings of earthly religions.

8. The preservation of the species lies in the following of the natural laws, so it is a following in veneration, overseeing and thus controlled.

9. The formula of the simple multiplying, however, is unvenerable, unmanageable and uncontrolled, because it creates proliferation in senseless masses and against all laws of nature.

10. And that the Earth human being follows the formula of the simple multiplying and disregards all creational-natural laws, is recognisable for every human being who moves even only in small paths of consciousness-based evolution:

11. Excessively and unrestrainedly, the humankind reproduces and procreates descendants in uncontrollable, unvenerable form.

12. Since your Earth is able to sustain and to feed 500 million human life forms, the Earth human being, however, procreated approximately 35 thousand million (2004 = 75 thousand million) human beings and thus in only a few hundred years drove an evil overpopulation to such an extent that millions must die of an abnormal death.....

27. The truth of the natural law for the nourishment and preservation of the life is that for each square kilometre of fertile land only 12 human life forms may be calculated.

28. A square kilometre of fertile land is able to feed 12 human lifeforms without worries, along with all animals given in the outdoor nature and the animals for human needs, without the human being 'having to' bring 'regulation', with their 'regulating' sense of disorder, into the wild life of the nature and into the actual natural regulation.

29. All famines become resolved and various illnesses are nipped in the bud when this law is followed and observed.

30. Through this, however, your problems of the environmental and air pollution also become solved, along with many other problems associated with it.

31. Wars and other similar outrages become reduced in the greatest measures, and the Earth human being learns again that to him/her, his/her next one is, in truth, his/her next one and that the human beings, amongst each other, are reliant on each other.

32. The love and harmony will again attain its validity, and peace will return to the Earth.

But are we going to listen to the pure Creation Energy forms of the Arahat Athersata who are hundreds of millions of years more evolved than us and have knowledge of countless worlds throughout time and dimensional space? Of course not, because Earth humans with our 6-12 million years of evolution obviously know better!!

Instead of Love we nurture Hate, instead of Peace we create War, instead of Freedom we are subjected to Conscious enslavement, manipulation and subjugation, instead of Harmony we cultivate everything negative and have lost all sense of equilibrium not only amongst our fellow humans but to all life and our planet.

In our egotistical need to control everything we seem to believe we can bend nature to our will but whatever we discover and wherever we go on this planet we only bring disharmony and destruction and keep taking, imagining that this can go on endlessly with impunity.

AA P12/14

10. Where the nature lives in its creationally-given laws and recommendations and fulfils its existence untouched by human hand, there reigns beauty, dignity, power and greatness.

11. But there, where traces of human interference, deliberate unlogical regulation and corrections are visible, there all beauty, dignity, power, greatness and regulation vanish.

Throughout earth's history material wealth has invariably given the minority power over the majority, and the historical observation that "All power tends to corrupt and absolute power corrupts absolutely" couldn't be truer, and this absolute power and desire for domination by those who hold this sceptre of power over us obscures all sense of their humanity, reason, fairness and justice, and therefore they believe they can do whatever they desire and invariably do with no real protest from the majority through the sense of fear which is constantly promulgated and reinforced especially by the religions. But these leaders have no real concept of the consequences of their decisions which are frequently based in their present or immediate future, without any longer-term causes being considered. The following extract is an excellent example of some of the reasons behind the current overpopulation crisis.

*Excerpt from CR 490: Book by Bernd Senf: Historical Roots of the Population Explosion

.....Incidentally, many species have only become pests or weeds because human beings, with their way of life and technology, have thoughtlessly interfered with nature and destroyed the existing ecological balance, for example by reducing or exterminating an animal species which in turn feeds on another species and thus naturally keeps its growth under control. So wherever exponential growth occurs, it is something unnatural, pathological, destructive: cancer, pests, weeds.

According to exactly these standards, humanity with its exponential population growth, which has now turned into a population explosion, is a pest – or a tumour on the organism Earth. Has this kind of population growth always existed, and has it only become so acute in recent decades?

Or was there previously a population development in harmony with nature, i.e. with other species and with the environment as a whole? And if so, has there historically been something like an initial spark that caused the population development to explode?

The answer, which is explained below, is: Yes! The initial spark of the population explosion did not occur in today's Third World, but in Central Europe, and from there, in the course of colonialism, it spread like a chain reaction to today's Third World.

THE ROLE OF WITCH-HUNTING

The main historical roots of the population explosion were not primarily – as is so often claimed – advances in modern medicine and hygiene, but the systematic eradication of women's originally widespread knowledge of natural contraception and the systematic channelling of sexuality for the purpose of reproducing human beings – while at the same time demonising all forms of lust-oriented sexuality that do not lead to procreation. The originator of this systematic 'breeding programme' was the church, and the essential means of its implementation was the persecution of witches, the 'destruction of the wise women' (this is the title of a book by Gunnar Heinsohn and Otto Steiger, to which I will refer repeatedly in the following).

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE KNOWLEDGE OF LIFE ENERGY

The witches of earlier centuries were not the evil, hunchbacked old women with a cat on their shoulder and practicing evil spells as they are told in many fairy tales. Rather, they were 'wise women' with a great deal of knowledge about health, illness and healing, as well as about questions of sexuality, contraception, pregnancy and birth. They were the bearers of a folk medicine based on natural healing methods, including life-energetic methods, and their affirmation of life and the emphasis on pleasure were also expressed in their ecstatic rituals and celebrations (coven).

The witches felt connected to the flowing life energy within themselves, often had a strong sexual charisma, could connect with the cosmic energy, which they called 'the great goddess', could let this energy flow through them and have a healing effect on others. They lived a form of spirituality that had not been possible in the frozen and male-dominated structures of the church for centuries.

The transmission or application of all this wisdom enabled women to decide about their bodies, about procreation, about pregnancy and birth, and to conceive or bear children only when they also wanted to. And the will to do so also depended on whether the child could be expected to have a sufficient material basis of existence and a life worthy of human beings. If there were no prospects in this respect, but only hunger, poverty, exploitation, oppression, then the women had little motivation to bring children into the world. And the witches knew how to prevent or avoid this when it was not desired.

So there was knowledge – spread all over the world, by the way – of the effectiveness of certain plants which – for example, processed into tea and administered to women – prevented conception for several years. (DeMeo has also compiled interesting historical and ethnological material on this subject). In this way, women were able to live out their sexuality without the constant fear of unwanted pregnancy. In Europe, this knowledge had already been taboo in the Middle Ages under the influence of the Church and had been pushed underground, where it was guarded by witches and passed on to other women again and again.

What interest did the Church have in finally eradicating this knowledge completely? It was both an economic and a sexual-economic interest, and with the persecution and extermination of the witches, the Church killed two birds with one stone, so to speak.

THE DESTRUCTION OF CONTRACEPTIVE KNOWLEDGE AS A MEANS OF HUMAN PRODUCTION

The beginning of the systematic witch-hunt does not coincide with a time when the population in Europe shrank dramatically due to climate-related famines, devastating economic crises and the great plague in the middle of the 14th century. In some areas, 70 per cent of the population had been wiped out, the average in Europe is estimated at around 50 per cent. As a result, the number of serf farmers and the additional product they produced, the basis for the levy on the feudal lords, had also fallen dramatically – and with it the source of wealth for the nobility. In some places this source of wealth threatened to dry up completely, and this also caused the basis of the social power and rule of the nobility to falter more and more.

On the one hand, the nobility tried to reduce their loss of wealth by increasing taxes and pressure on the peasants in bondage, on the other hand, this was precisely what provoked more and more resistance on the part of the peasants, which resulted in peasant revolts. Under such devastating economic circumstances, rural women were less and less inclined to give birth to children.

Now the biggest landowner at that time was the church, which saw its economic power dwindling more and more. Large landowners without a rural population, who work the land as serfs, no longer produce wealth. So the church superiors came up with a strategy of how they could get or force women to give birth to as many children as possible in order to produce population growth and regenerate the source of exploitation of human labour in the countryside.

THE REDUCTION OF SEXUALITY TO HUMAN BREEDING

From these considerations, the so-called witches' bull of Pope Innocent VIII, the canonical legal basis for the persecution of witches, was created in 1484. It was followed in 1487 by the official legal commentary of the witch bull, the so-called witch hammer of the two Dominican friars Sprenger and Institoris.

From both documents the direction and the actual purpose of the witch hunt are unmistakable. They are directed directly against all knowledge and abilities of witches in the field of contraception and abortion as well as lust-oriented sexuality. The application and passing on of such knowledge was criminalized and punished with death. The destruction of contraceptive knowledge alone would not have guaranteed stronger offspring. To achieve this goal, sexuality in its manifold forms of expression and experience was also reduced to heterosexual intercourse between spouses. All other forms of sexuality that did not lead to the 'breeding' of offspring were declared 'fornication' and also punishable by death.

The corresponding laws were later also adopted by the state, i.e. by the emperor, and with the expansion of his dominion, the persecution of witches then spread throughout Europe. That the feudal state had the same interest as the church in this respect is evident from the above. But also with the dissolution of feudalism and the development of capitalism, the new ruling class, the bourgeoisie, initially had a great interest in a growing population, in order to create a growing number of wage earners with correspondingly falling wages, as well as a growing number of cheap soldiers for their colonial conquests. Even the Church Reformation, which worked towards a greater secularization of the faith and criticized and fought against many abuses of power by the Catholic Church, agreed with the Pope on the issue of witch-hunting and under Luther did not distance itself from this mass murder of women, but supported it. In this respect not only the path of the Catholic but also that of the Protestant Church – as far as the persecution of witches is concerned – is marked with traces of blood. Both churches have not yet come to terms with this dark chapter in their history, nor have they officially admitted it, let alone apologized for even one of these millions of murders. After all, it took the Catholic Church 350 years to officially admit its error about Galileo, to admit that not the Inquisition, but Galileo was right in his assertion that the Earth revolves around the sun and is not the centre of the world. How long do you think it will take until the churches will admit their guilt about the Holocaust to the witches and until they will be officially rehabilitated?

CHURCH INQUISITION, TORTURE AND MASS MURDER

To convict the witches for their alleged crimes, they first had to be identified as witches. Accordingly, the Inquisition sent an army of men across the country, who called on the population to spy and denounce them and paid a bounty for every report of a witch. The denunciation of women as witches thus became a flourishing business for many. If the alleged witches were wealthy themselves, it also became a business for the church, because the assets of these women were confiscated.

In order to denounce a woman as a witch, the slightest suspicion or even malice on the part of the denunciators was enough. The Inquisition then checked by means of 'witch tests' whether the suspicion was justified. A witch test, for example, consisted of examining the women for so-called devil marks. It was assumed that witches could only practice their craft in covenant with the devil and had a sexual relationship with the devil, which must have left its mark on a devil's mark. If a devil's mark – similar to a birthmark – was not visible at first sight, the woman had to expose herself bit by bit before the eyes of the inquisitor. If there was still not a mark, the hair was gradually shaved off, the hair on the head, the hair in the armpits and finally also the pubic hair. If there was still no sign of the devil, the vagina was palpated. And if this also did not give a reliable result, the 'nail test' or the 'water test' followed:

In the acid test, the woman's body was punctured a hundred times with long nails, and it was assumed that an inner devil mark was characterized by the fact that it did not react to a puncture with pain or bleeding. Once such a mark had been found (and it exists in every body), the woman was convicted as a witch and was publicly burned at the stake.

The water test consisted of the suspected woman being tied by her arms and legs and then thrown into the water. A witch was believed to be able to free herself from her bonds in covenant with the devil and through supernatural powers. So women who could somehow free themselves from their fetters were thus convicted as witches and were burned. The others, who did not succeed, were not convicted – but drowned. Death by burning or drowning, these were the alternatives for women who had been denounced by others and suspected as witches because of the hunt for the bounty or for any other base motives. "In doubt against the accused" was the motto, and in any case, the 'surefire' witch test removed any doubt.

For the inquisitors, who were themselves subject to celibacy, the witch trials were a welcome outlet for their pent-up and sadistically perverted sexuality. The public burning of witches had a similar function for the masses: For the more the witch hunts condemned lustful sexuality as 'fornication' and punished with death, the more a climate of sexual hostility and sexual fear spread, which dammed up sexual energies and could only find its outlet in destructive discharge. In this respect, the public burning of witches also fulfilled an important mass psychological function.

Another aspect of witch persecution was the torture of the alleged witches in order to obtain a confession from them and to force them to denounce other women. In torture chambers their limbs were torn apart and torn from their bodies and other cruelties were committed against them until they were tortured to death. On the bodies torn apart and cut open in such a way, one could now study how the human body is constructed from the inside. This was the beginning of anatomy, one of the foundations of modern medicine! In the course of the emerging mechanistic world view, one sought access to the understanding of illness and health by dismembering and cutting up the body. Somewhere the disease had to be located, somewhere an organ or tissue had to be changed compared to the healthy state of an organism.

BURNING OF WITCHES AND THE DESTRUCTION OF POPULAR MEDICINE

After the witches' wisdom and knowledge of the functions of sexuality and life energy and the energetic methods of prevention and healing derived from them had been eradicated, it was no longer possible to imagine a life-energetic understanding of illness, health and healing at all. In accordance with the mechanistic understanding of nature, they looked for any parts that were no longer intact and – like a broken machine – needed to be repaired; or for material pathogens as the alleged sole cause of the disease, which then had to be identified, fought and killed. The catastrophic state of health of the population, which was reflected among other things in high numbers of fatal pregnancies and stillbirths as well as increased infant mortality, was to a large extent only the consequence of the preceding destruction of folk medicine, the carriers of which had been witches and midwives.

With the extermination of witches and midwives, antenatal care and obstetrics were increasingly transferred to men and eventually became their domain. Women were completely pushed out of this activity or relegated to subordinate auxiliary services. The men, however, had not the slightest idea of the natural functions of female sexuality, of pregnancy and birth, and now tried to reduce their deficit by dissecting female bodies.

It is understandable that, as a result of this type of medicine, diseases first became more frequent (e.g. complications at the puerperium due to unsterile cutting during birth) and that the sterilisation of medical instruments, on the other hand, represented a major advance. However, as long as pregnancy and birth had been cared for by the witches/midwives with their completely different understanding of female functions, the support of natural self-regulation of the female body as well as the application of life-energetic healing methods and other natural remedies, such complications could hardly have occurred. But once the natural self-regulation is destroyed, even its destroyer can still offer itself as a great saviour and helper, because the victim is ultimately dependent on its help and is also grateful for it.

So it seems to be a false myth that modern medicine has been one of the main causes of the population explosion by reducing infant and child mortality and increasing average life expectancy. But even if medicine had been effective in this way, this would not have automatically resulted in population growth if women had continued to have the means of natural contraception and conscious child planning. However, after this knowledge had been taken away from them in the course of the witch-hunt and a sexually hostile morality had been enforced, they were deprived of these possibilities.

WITCH PERSECUTION AND POPULATION DEVELOPMENT

The result of this targeted strategy of church and state to increase human production was not long in coming. Although the witch hunt led to millions of victims among the women, it also drove the average number of children of the surviving women so high that an exponential population growth was initiated. So this is where the historical roots lie, this is where the population explosion began, and not – at least not primarily – in the achievements of modern medicine.

The ruling classes in Europe were initially only pleased with this development because the sources of exploitation were once again abundant and their wealth was thus increased: for the nobility, an increase in the number of peasants in bondage and a renewed increase in the additional product they earned and were forced to pay; for the bourgeoisie or the capitalists, an increase in the number of wage earners and thus the coverage of the growing demand for labour (or the need for soldiers for the upcoming conquest campaigns of colonialism). A certain surplus of labour was also in their interest because it pushed down wages and thus increased profits.

However, with the development of capitalism, the population development in Europe went beyond the original goal of the ruling classes. In connection with the original accumulation and uprooting of masses of people from their previous livelihoods, there was such overpopulation in relation to jobs that the problems of social misery were eradicated by force, with the aforementioned mass murders of unemployed people who wanted to ensure their survival as beggars, thieves or vagabonds.

However, anti-sexual morality and the destruction of contraceptive knowledge were now so deeply rooted in society that, despite overpopulation in early capitalism and high capitalism, there were not any substantial sexual reforms until the mid-twentieth century.

On the other hand, the overpressure of population growth forced waves of emigration to the rest of the world, which had to be 'discovered' and conquered. In this way many escaped the threat of hunger and violence in Europe and found a new perspective on life. In this respect, the distant countries were no longer only interesting for trade, but also as settlement areas for European emigrants. From this point of view, colonialism was also an outlet for solving the pressure of problems in capitalist Europe.

Since human beings of other races, cultures and skin colours lived in these countries, an ideology of domination was needed that justified subjugating, exploiting these human beings and to break their resistance with force if necessary. Only the whites from Europe were considered human beings, the others were sub-humans, comparable to animals that had to be subjugated or slaughtered. The church gave its blessing to all the genocides and enslavement, to all the destruction of foreign cultures, traditions and religions, and sent its missionaries out into the world to pave the way for colonization and to provide ideological security.

By destroying still existing natural religions and sex-affirming ways of life, which were fought against as pagan and immoral, she also destroyed the still existing knowledge and the willingness and ability for conscious child planning. The Pope still travels to the Third World and declares contraception a cardinal sin. This is not the first time that the Catholic Church is complicit in unbelievable human misery – and consoles its faithful to a better hereafter, if they only believe in the God of the Church and submit to their fate.

Like other patriarchal religions that emerged in the last six thousand years after the origin of violence, the faith of the Roman Catholic Church is also deeply masochistic: suffering and submission instead of lust, joy of life and self-confident development. Instead of perceiving and allowing the 'divine' (FIGU note: the creative) in oneself and in nature to flow as sexuality and creativity and to feel connected to all living and loving in the same cosmic life energy, in the patriarchal and sex-hostile religions the 'divine' is buried in one's own body and split off and projected into the hereafter as a punishing God to whom one must submit.

The spirituality of witches and other natural religions, which included a direct sensual experience of the 'divine' in one's own body, had to be destroyed by the church for this reason. The trust in one's own power, the sensual experience of the healing and loving power of the life energy in oneself, in connection with other human beings and nature as a whole, made any belief in a God in the hereafter or in his supposed representatives on Earth obsolete.

So here we are in 2024, and our leaders are being pressured by those who have figured out that the floods, droughts, tornadoes, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, landslides, forest fires, tsunamis, hurricanes, extreme cold, extreme heat, famines, pestilence etc... are year on year increasing in their frequency and magnitude, and that this might be an issue!!! So these leaders hold climate talks and promise to throw money at the problem, but only empty words and future promises are made in a hopeless endeavour to improve the situation, but all of these discussions and actions are sticking plasters on a gaping wound that we have inflicted on nature and our planet, to which we are reluctant to acknowledge, but the problem with narcissistic psychopaths is that they couldn't care less about nature or the environment, they are only interested in their self-image, bank balance and power retention and will therefore blatantly lie to the populace to try and keep them appeased.

So, it still comes back to the same theme, our leaders want an increasing population so they can rake in more and more taxes to keep themselves in luxury, have more humans to use as cannon fodder in senseless wars instigated by them, incarcerate, torture or eliminate any humans who threaten their positions of power, whilst monitoring the rest of us to ensure we remain subjugated, compliant, obedient, and never discover the truth and reality of Creation.

We should ask ourselves in a logical and rational way, will our problems increase or decrease if the planetary population continues growing? It is an indisputable fact that our planet is a certain size and therefore the land mass and resources are finite, how is it then possible to have an infinite population? Is it not therefore conceivable that there are too many of us? Why won't we at least think about and discuss the possibility that overpopulation is the problem behind the destruction of our climate and many other causations?

Our forests are being cut down at an alarming rate, natural habitats are being destroyed, pollution of rivers and oceans are increasing, arable land is shrinking and all because our needs and demands have become insatiable.

(CR: 827) Ptaah;

13. But what you mentioned concerning the extinction of life-forms on Earth, according to our very precise research on the entire planet, in the last 50 years alone, 72.13 percent of all known natural life-forms have been wiped out by Earth-humans through their machinations and interventions in free nature and its fauna and flora.

14. This really only concerns that part of the life-forms known to Earth-humans, while those still completely unknown to them have also been so displaced by the plundering and deforestation and destruction of forests and fertile land for roads, bridges, apartment blocks, factories, airfields and other buildings, as well as for unnecessary sporting purposes, such as ice stadiums, football stadiums, tennis stadiums, etc., that their habitat has become precariously smaller.

15. Thus, many of the life-forms still unknown to Earth-humans are in danger of soon being wiped out as well.

16. It seems to me that it is necessary for once to raise the word of how precarious it is for the totality of all things on the planet Earth and its true condition and all life.

17. Also the planet itself has been so dramatically and criminally robbed of its existence and endangered by the entire predatory exploitation of its resources of all kinds, and this in the long term, that at the present time the planet Earth is already 60 per cent damaged in its ability to exist and in its condition to such an extent that one must already speak of a decay.

The increasing pollution, environmental poisoning and environmental destruction caused by the logging of virgin forests has become extremely problematic for nature and its fauna and flora and has led to great destruction as well as tremendous climate changes. If the future of the Amazon rainforest is considered, up to 60% will be irrevocably destroyed by the year 2030 due to the unconscionable and criminal deforestation of the same. If the primeval forests in Asia are considered, then it is to be clarified that already today three quarters of it are cleared and destroyed without salvation. But in Africa, too, the deforestation catastrophe is spreading, and on an extremely serious scale, because at present only 8% of the virgin forest is still untouched. The fact is that every year, as much virgin forest is destroyed as three times the area of Switzerland, which is 41,285 km² without the mountainous areas. This means that worldwide about 125,000 km² of primeval forest are destroyed and destroyed every year (see appendix end of article: area of Switzerland). This of course has devastating consequences for nature and its fauna and flora, but also for the climate and the oxygen content in the atmosphere, which is vital for all life forms on earth.

The fact is that the tropical rain forests produce 40% of the total oxygen. Regardless of this fact, the rainforests are being robbed, destroyed and completely annihilated unthinkingly and criminally for the sake of filthy lucre and profit. Every year, huge areas of virgin forest fall victim to mining, slash-and-burn agriculture, the timber industry, gas and oil production, as well as the construction of hydroelectric power plants. Many virgin rainforest areas that have been cleared and continue to be cleared are being planted with various plants that can be used to produce biofuels, with more than half of the newly reclaimed areas being misused in this way.

The destruction of tropical rainforests with timber harvesters etc. alone accounts for around 25% of global CO₂ emissions. If we look at the developing country of Indonesia, which is now the third largest producer of CO₂, the peat fires there currently cause emissions of 700-800 million tons of carbon dioxide. If CO₂ emissions are considered in relation to the coming deforestation of the tropics as a whole, then between 100 and 130 billion tons of CO₂ can be expected to be produced by the year 2100. Calculations show that if sugar cane or oil palms were planted to replace the deforested rainforests, a period of 50 to 120 years would be required before the CO₂ emissions saved by fossil fuels and deforestation could be recouped. If corn or soybeans were planted as a substitute, it would take 400 to 1600 years.

CR 871 Billy

From the year 2020 onwards – according to future forecasts made on the spot – around 60,000 life-forms of all genera and species will disappear worldwide every year.

Nature has for millions of years within its own harmonious and creational regulatory form produced the diversity of fauna and flora on our planet, for the benefit of all and the health of our environment, how can it be anything but sheer insanity to destroy it all? How will all the money in the world help when there is nothing left to buy?

The fact is that whilst our Creation Energy forms animate a material body, we need nature to provide us with clean water, breathable air and healthy food, but in our egotistical mania and technological advancement we think we can control nature and bend it to our will, we spread our pesticides and herbicides operate our billions of combustible engines, deplete natural resources, dump our chemicals into the ground and water systems, spread our rubbish and plastics to every corner of our planet from the highest mountains to the deepest oceans seemingly oblivious to the damage and destruction this causes to all and everything.

Earth humanity is rapidly reaching a point of no return, unless we come to our senses and soon to act together for the benefit of all of us, then we will carry on as before, and once we have destroyed the remaining 28% of all Fauna and Flora, and there are no more pollinators how many crops will we be able to grow?

Plejaren warning of the Inevitable Consequences of Overpopulation.

BEAM P. 562 From the Depths of Outer Space

- Warlike conflicts.
- Permanent potential danger of a third world war.
- Worldwide environmental destruction, such as air pollution, slash-and-burn farming, exploitation of rainforests and resources, radioactive contamination, chemical poisoning, and so on and so forth, through which fauna and flora are also exterminated, which is tantamount to the destruction of the entire foundation of human life.
- Increasing weakening of the human beings in physical as well as psychical and consciousness-based form, whereby the power of the life-capability rapidly sinks.
- Feminisation of the male life form, which is expressed more and more in animals as well.
- Rapidly increasing infertility of the women and men (because nature inevitably begins to defend itself through mutation, etc., which also has an effect on the sperm production of the man, by which this is already scientifically proven to be decreasing. If the human being therefore does not undertake something himself/herself against the overpopulation and radically curbs this, then the nature strikes with epidemics and infertility, etc. to such an extent that the humankind will one day become absolutely incapable of procreation and thereby destroy itself).
- Increasing worldwide, elemental natural catastrophes, such as hurricanes, earthquakes, droughts, floods and volcanic eruptions, etc.
- Increasing worldwide famines; new outbreaks of old diseases, plagues, illnesses and afflictions, which the human being believes to have conquered, as well as new, unknown, incurable and deadly diseases and rampantly spreading diseases, etc.
- Even further increasing destruction of the ozone layer, because the effects of today's still irresponsible, continuous release of the destructive gases will only become apparent in 25 to 50 years.
- Climate warming and extreme climatic plunges in all seasons

- Complete discoloration of the sky into a dirty, light grey colour.
- Hatred of those close to oneself within one's own family, hatred of foreigners and racial hatred as well as contempt for life and human beings and hatred of peoples.
